The Biomechanics of the Push-Up: Implications for Resistance Training Programs

- 1. Bret Contreras, M.A., CSCS
- 2. Brad Schoenfeld, M.Sc., CSCS, NSCA-CPT
- 3. Jonathan Mike, PhD (Candidate) USAW, CSCS, NSCA-CPT
- 4. Gul Tiryaki-Sonmez, Ph.D.
- 5. John Cronin, Ph.D.

Running head: Push-up

Lead Summary

The push-up is widely used by fitness professionals to develop upper body strength, power, and local muscular endurance. Although the load during a push-up is limited by an individual's bodyweight and anthropometry, many biomechanical variations of the exercise can be performed to alter muscle activity by providing either a lesser or greater challenge to the target musculature. These variations most often involve altering hand and foot positions, which impacts muscle recruitment patterns and joint stresses. The implications of these variations, however, often are overlooked with respect to the individual needs and goals of the client. This paper examines the research pertaining to the biomechanical aspects of the push-up and provides practical recommendations for their application to exercise performance.

Key Words: Exercise selection, biomechanics, muscular endurance

Introduction

The push-up has long been advocated as a means to assess local muscular endurance of the upper body. A variety of timed and untimed push-up tests are commonly employed as part of a fitness assessment, and these tests have been validated across a wide range of populations (23). Moreover, research shows a high correlation between push-up ability and the number of bench press repetitions performed as a percentage of body weight (1), thus providing an efficient and inexpensive alternative to free weight testing.

In fitness settings, push-ups are widely used to develop upper body strength, power and muscular endurance. They are staple exercises in fitness and gym classes; they are used by strength and conditioning professionals to train athletes in sports such as baseball (10), boxing (22), and martial arts (13); and they play a prominent role in the basic training programs of the United States Military (18). Plyometric push-ups are considered essential for optimizing stretch-shortening cycle-induced adaptations for the upper body (21).

Although the load during a push-up is limited by an individual's bodyweight and anthropometry, many biomechanical variations of the exercise can be performed to alter muscle activity by providing either a lesser or greater challenge to the target musculature. These variations most often involve altering hand and foot positions, which impacts muscle recruitment patterns and joint stresses (3, 15). Other variations include using various implements such as unstable surfaces, suspension training devices, and specially designed push-up equipment. The implications of these variations, however, often are not well understood with respect to the individual needs and goals of the client. Therefore, the purpose of this column is twofold: first, to examine the research pertaining to the biomechanical aspects of the push-up and; second, to make practical recommendations for their application to exercise performance.

The Biomechanics of the Push-up

The standard push-up requires a general stiffening of the knee joints, hip joints, pelvis, and spine to keep the body in a straight line from head to feet while the shoulders and elbows flex and extend to raise and lower the body and the scapulae retract and protract to facilitate glenohumeral range of motion. Table 1 showcases biomechanical data found in the literature regarding the standard push-up exercise.

Insert Table 1 here

Push-ups can be performed with a multitude of variations to bring about different muscular recruitment patterns. The knee push-up shortens the lever which reduces bodyweight loading to 54% in the top position and 62% in the bottom position (19) and substantially reduces prime mover (9) and core musculature requirements (11).

Perhaps the most popular variations are achieved by altering hand position. Although a number of potential hand positions exist, the most common classifications include wide base (150% shoulder width), normal base (shoulder width) and narrow base (50% shoulder width) (9). It is commonly believed that the wide base activates the pectoralis major to a greater degree than the other positions, while the narrow base optimizes activation of the triceps brachii (8). This is consistent with the basic principles of applied anatomy. Specifically, the pectoralis major is a primary horizontal flexor, and flaring the elbows would seemingly improve the muscle's length-tension relationship, thereby facilitating its ability to generate greater force (12). On the other hand, a narrow base with the elbows held close to the body would place the pectorals in a biomechanically disadvantageous position, thus requiring greater force output from the triceps brachii. However, electromyographic (EMG) studies evaluating muscle recruitment patterns during push-up performance suggest that narrow base push-ups not only elicit greater activation of the triceps brachii compared to the wide base position, but they also promote superior activation of the sternal head of the pectoralis major as well (4, 9). What is not clear in these studies is whether performance was carried out in the transverse plane (i.e. elbows flared) of the sagittal plane (i.e. elbow close to the body). Contrary to popular belief, when the hands are placed in a very narrow position it tends to encourage flaring of the elbows, orienting movement into the transverse plane. If these studies did indeed show greater activity of the sternal head in the sagittal plane, further research is warranted to clarify the reason for this apparent paradox. Moreover, given that the clavicular head of the pectoralis major is a primary shoulder flexor (17), it can be theorized that push-ups performed in the sagittal plane would maximize activity of this portion of the muscle. To the authors' knowledge, this has yet to be investigated.

In addition, shifting the torso forward or rearward relative to the bands affects muscular recruitment patterns. Specifically, shifting the torso forward relative to the hands results in increased pectoralis major activity and decreased triceps brachil activity compared to normal base position, whereas shifting the torso rearward relative to the hands resulted in slightly increased pectoralis major and triceps brachil activity (9).

Foot position also is often altered to vary muscle recruitment. Recently, Ebben et al. (5) assessed the peak vertical ground reaction forces (GRFs) of push-up variations including the standard push-up and those performed from the knees, with feet elevated on a 30.5-cm box and a 61.0-cm box, and with hands elevated on these boxes. Push-ups with the feet elevated produced a higher GRF than all other push-up variations compared to push-ups with hands elevated and push-ups from the knees. When expressed as a percentage of total body mass, the order from least to greatest load progressed from the hands elevated on a 61.0-cm box (41% of bodyweight), to the knee push-up (49%), to the hands elevated on a 30.5-cm box (55%), to the regular push-up (64%), to the feet elevated on a 30.5-cm box (70%), and finally to the feet elevated on a 61.0-cm box (74%).

Another push-up variation involves the use of unstable surfaces. Compared to standard push-ups, BosuTM push-ups have been shown to increase the activity of some of the scapular stabilizers, namely the upper, mid, and lower trapezius fibers, however serratus anterior activity was diminished (20). Research from Lehman et al. (15) reported that elevating the feet above the hands had a greater stimulus or scapulothoracic stabilizing musculature than placing the hands on an unstable surface (i.e. Swiss ball). From a training perspective, it is more challenging and demanding for the shoulder girdle stabilizers to perform push-ups with the feet elevated on a bench and the hands on the ground than to perform push-ups with the hands on a Swiss ball and the feet on the ground.

Lehman et al. (14) found that push-ups with the hands placed on a Swiss ball significantly increased triceps brachii activation. Swiss ball push-ups also increased pectoralis major, rectus abdominis, and external oblique activation compared to push-ups on a bench from the same angle, whereas push-ups with the feet placed on a Swiss ball did not affect muscle activity compared to push-ups with the feet on a bench from the same angle. In addition, Marshall and Murphy (16) showed that triceps brachii and abdominal EMG activity was significantly greater when performing push-ups off Swiss balls compared to stable surfaces from flat and elevated positions. These results indicate that the Swiss ball appears to only increase muscle activity during exercises where the unstable surface is the primary base of support. From a muscle activation standpoint, it therefore appears to be more effective to perform exercises such as Swiss ball and BosuTM push-ups in comparison to stable surface push-ups as long as torso angle remains constant and the hands are placed on the unstable piece of equipment rather than the feet.

Push-ups can also be performed with suspension devices and implements specially designed to facilitate changes in hand positions. Beach et al. (2) showed that suspended push-ups activated more core musculature than standard push-ups. One such device, the Perfect Push-upTM, is purported to be biomechanically engineered to achieve better results from push-up workouts. The efficacy of this claim was investigated by Youdas et al. (24) who used EMG to evaluate muscle activity in the Perfect Push-upTM versus standard push-ups. Muscle activation was evaluated during the performance of push-ups using three different hand positions: normal base, wide base, and narrow base. The muscles studied included the triceps brachii, pectoralis major, serratus anterior, and posterior deltoids. EMG analysis failed to show any significant differences between groups, leading researchers to conclude that, Perfect Push-upTM handgrips do not seem to increase muscular recruitment when compared to standard push-ups.

Finally, speed of movement can be altered to charge push-up biomechanics. Explosive push-ups have been compared in terms of peak force, rate of force development, and peak impact force. Garcia-Masso (7) examined the fall push-up (an explosive push-up starting from a tallkneeling position, falling to a knee push-up position, and returning to the tall-kneeling position), jump push-up (an explosive push-up starting from standard position, where the upper body leaves the ground and becomes airborne before returning to standard position), and countermovement push-up (a rapid push-up characterized by fast eccentric, reversal, and concentric phases, but does not involve leaving the ground) and found that the countermovement push-up, which was performed with maximal speed, exhibited the highest peak force and rate of force development. Given that this is the only variation that does not encounter impact forces, it appears that the countermovement push-up is a safe and effective choice for explosive variations if one wishes to maximize aspects of upper body power. Clapping push-ups have been shown to outperform standard, slow eccentric, one-hand on medball, staggered hands, hands on two balls, two hands on one ball, rapid countermovement, one arm, and alternating plyometric push-up variations in pectoralis major and triceps brachii activity (6). Advanced forms of plyometric push-ups could be problematic for individuals with back issues, given that an alternating plyometric push-up using a medicine ball has been shown to induce 6,224N of compressive forces on the lumbar spine (6).

Additional alterations can be employed to decrease or increase the challenging nature of the exercise. For example, wall push-ups (leaning forward with hands against the wall) and knee push-ups (knees on the floor) are appropriate for those with limited upper body strength while push-ups using one arm or one leg can make the movement sufficiently challenging even for those who are highly fit. Furthermore, a weighted vest, elastic bands, chains, and/or various unstable implements can be employed to further challenge the upper body musculature. Table 2 illustrates some push-up variations, categorized into levels of difficulty.

Insert Table 2 here

Conclusion

Push-ups can be an excellent exercise for improving muscle strength and endurance. It is imperative that practitioners possess adequate knowledge of push-up variations in order to optimize the challenge on the target musculature without compromising proper form and risking injury. The biomechanical information contained herein can serve as a guideline to prescribe proper progressions and regressions to achieve desired outcomes.

Prime mover mean muscle activation normalized to Maximum Voluntary Contraction (MVC) Pectoralis major – 61% (1) Triceps brachii – 66% (1) Anterior deltoid – 42% (1) Upper body stabilizer and synergist muscle activation hormalized to MVC Latissimus dorsi – 11% (1) Biceps brachii – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Middle trapezius – 18% (3) Iower/trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Posoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1)	ompressive spinal loading on L4/L5 1,838N (1) rime mover mean muscle activation normalized to /laximum Voluntary Contraction (MVC) Pectoralis major – 61% (1) Triceps brachii – 66% (1) Anterior deltoid – 42% (1) Ipper body stabilizer and synergist muscle activation ormalized to MVC Latissimus dorsi – 11% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Middle trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) ore muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1)	Relative Load	69% of bodyweight in top position (2)
Prime mover mean muscle activation normalized to Maximum Voluntary Contraction (MVC) Pectoralis major – 61% (1) Triceps brachii – 66% (1) Anterior deltoid – 42% (1) Upper body stabilizer and synergist muscle activation normalized to MVC Latissimus dorsi – 11% (1) Biceps brachii – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Middle trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratys anterior – 56% (3) Core muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Core subdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	rime mover mean muscle activation normalized to Aaximum Voluntary Contraction (MVC) Pectoralis major – 61% (1) Triceps brachii – 66% (1) Anterior deltoid – 42% (1) Poper body stabilizer and synergist muscle activation ormalized to MVC Deserior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper tabezius – 45% (3) Midale trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Pectoralis major – 61% (1) Triceps brachii – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper tabezius – 45% (3) Nidale trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Pectoralis major – 61% (1) Rectus abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)		75% of bodyweight in bottom position (2)
Maximum Voluntary Contraction (MVC) Triceps brachii – 66% (1) Anterior deltoid – 42% (1) Upper body stabilizer and synergist muscle activation normalized to MVC Latissimus dorsi – 11% (1) Biceps brachii – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Midale trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Core muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Rectus abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Aaximum Voluntary Contraction (MVC) Triceps brachii – 66% (1) Anterior deltoid – 42% (1) Ipper body stabilizer and synergist muscle activation ormalized to MVC Desterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 55% (3) Middle trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Ore muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1)	Compressive spinal loading on L4/L5	1,838N (1)
Triceps brachii – 66% (1) Anterior deltoid – 42% (1) Upper body stabilizer and synergist muscle activation normalized to MVC Latissimus dorsi – 11% (1) Biceps brachii – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trabezius – 45% (3) Midule trapezius – 18% (3) Lowel trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Core muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Triceps brachii – 66% (1) Anterior deltoid – 42% (1) Ipper body stabilizer and synergist muscle activation ormalized to MVC Biceps brachii – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Midale trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Posoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1)	Prime mover mean muscle activation normalized to Maximum Voluntary Contraction (MVC)	Pectoralis major – 61% (1)
Upper body stabilizer and synergist muscle activation normalized to MVC Biceps brachii – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Middle trapezius – 18% (3) Iower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Core muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Ipper body stabilizer and synergist muscle activation ormalized to MVC Biceps brachii – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Midele trapezius – 18% (3) tower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Ore muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)		Triceps brachii – 66% (1)
normalized to MVC Biceps brachii – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Midale trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Core muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	ormalized to MVC Biceps brachii – 4% (1) Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trabezius – 45% (3) Midale trapezius – 18% (3) Lowel trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Pisoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)		Anterior deltoid – 42% (1)
Posterior deltoid 17% (4) Upper trapezius - 45% (3) Middle trapezius - 18% (3) Lower trapezius - 27% (3) Serratus anterior - 56% (3) Psoas - 24% (1) External oblique - 29% (1) Internal oblique - 29% (1) Internal oblique - 10% (1) Transverse abdominis - 9% (1) Rectus abdominis - 29% (1) Rectus femoris - 10% (1)	Posterior deltoid – 17% (4) Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Middle trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)
Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Midale trapezius – 18% (3) Lowe) trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Core muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Upper trapezius – 45% (3) Midule trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)
Middle trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Core muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Middle trapezius – 18% (3) Lower trapezius – 27% (3) Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)
Core muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	ore muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)
Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Core muscle activation normalized to MVC External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Serratus anterior – 56% (3) Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)
Core muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Fore muscle activation normalized to MVC Psoas – 24% (1) External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)
External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	External oblique – 29% (1) Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)
Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Internal oblique – 10% (1) Transverse abdominis – 9% (1) Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Core muscle activation normalized to MVC
Transverse abdominis – 9% (1)Rectus abdominis – 29% (1)Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Transverse abdominis – 9% (1)Rectus abdominis – 29% (1)Rectus femoris – 10% (1)
Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Rectus abdominis – 29% (1) Rectus femoris – 10% (1)
Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	Rectus femoris – 10% (1)	\sim \vee
$rac{1}{2}$ Erector spinae – 3% (1)
		X

	Wall push-up
Novice Variations	Torso-elevated push-up
	Knee push-up
Intermediate Variations	Standard push-up
	Wide base push-up
	Narrow base push-up
	Rapid countermovement push-up
	Torso shifted forward push-up
	Torso shifted rearward push-up
	Feet-elevated push-up
	Upper bødy suspended push-up (ex: TRX™)
	Hands on Swiss ball push-up
	Hands on Bosu™ ball push-up
	Perfect PushUp™ push-up
	Handle grip push-up
	Fall push-up (from knees)
	Staggered base push-up
	Alternating side-to-side push-up
	One legged push-up
	Between-bench push-up
Advanced Variations	Clapping push-up
	Self-assisted one-arm push-up
	One arm push-up
	Weighted-vest push-up
	Weighted push-up (plates on back)
	Elastic band-resisted push-up
	Chain push-up (draped over back)
	8

References

1. Baumgartner, T, Oh, S, Chung, H, and Hales, D. Objectivity, reliability, and validity for a revised push-up test protocol. Measurement in Physical Education and Exercise Science, 6: 225-242, 2002.

2. Beach, T, Howarth, S, and Callaghan, J. Muscular contribution to low-back loading and stiffness during standard and suspended push-ups. Hum Mov Sci. 27: 457-472, 2008.

3. Chuckpaiwong, B, and Harnroongroj, T. Palmar pressure distribution during push-up exercise. Singapore Med. J. 50: 702-704, 2009.

4. Cogley, R, Archambault, T, Fibeger, J, Koverman, M, Youdas, J, and Hollman, J. Comparison of muscle activation using various hand positions during the push-up exercise. J Strength Cond Res 19: 628-633, 2005.

5. Ebben, WP, Wurm, B, VanderZanden, TL, Spadavecchia, MD, Durocher, JJ, Bickham, CT, and Petushek, EJ. Kinetic analysis of several variations of push-ups. J Strength Cond Res 25: 2891-2894, 2011.

6. Freeman, S, Karpowicz, A, Gray, J, and McGill, S. Quantifying muscle patterns and spine load during various forms of the push-up. Med. Sci. Sports Exerc. 38: 570-577, 2006.

7. Garcia-Masso, X, Colado, JC, Gonzalez, LM, Salva, P, Alves, J, Tella, V, and Triplett, NT. Myoelectric activation and kinetics of different plyometric push-up exercises. J Strength Cond Res 25: 2040-2047, 2011.

8. Geiger, B. Training notebook: Angle play. Muscle Fitness January: 46-48, 2004.

9. Gouvali, M, and Boudolos, K. Dynamic and electromyographical analysis in variants of pushup exercise. J Strength Cond Res 19: 146-151, 2005.

10. Hammer, C. Preseason training for college baseball. Strength Cond J 31: 79-85, 2009.

11. Juker, D, McGill, S, Kropf, P, and Steffen, T. Quantitative intramuscular myoelectric activity of lumbar portions of psoas and the abdominal wall during a wide variety of tasks. Med. Sci. Sports Exerg. 20: 301, 310, 1998.

12. Kuechle, DK, Newman, SR, Itoi, E, Morrey, BF, and An, KN. Shoulder muscle moment arms during horizontal flexion and elevation. J. Shoulder Elbow Surg. 6: 429-439, 1997.

13. La Bounty, P, Campbell, B, Galvan, E, Cooke, M, and Antonio, J. Strength and Conditioning Considerations for Mixed Martial Arts. Strength Cond J 33: 56-67, 2011.

9

14. Lehman, G, MacMillan, B, MacIntyre, I, Chivers, M, and Fluter, M. Shoulder muscle EMG activity during push up variations on and off a Swiss ball. Dyn Med 5: 7, 2006.

15. Lehman, G, Gilas, D, and Patel, U. An unstable support surface does not increase scapulothoracic stabilizing muscle activity during push up and push up plus exercises. Man Ther. 13: 500-506, 2008.

16. Marshall, P, and Murphy, B. Changes in muscle activity and perceived exertion during exercises performed on a swiss ball. Appl Physiol Nutr Metab. 31: 376-383, 2006.

17. Paton, ME, and Brown, JM. An electromyographic analysis of functional differentiation in human pectoralis major muscle. J. Electromyogr. Kinesiol. 4: 161-169, (1994.)

18. Popovich, RM, Gardner, JW, Potter, R, Knapik, JJ, and Jones, BH. Effect of rest from running on overuse injuries in army basic training. Am. J. Prev. Med. 18, 147-155, 2000.

19. Suprak, DN, Dawes, J, and Stephenson, MD. The effect of position on the percentage of body mass supported during traditional and modified push-up variants. J. Strength Cond Res. 25: 497-503, 2011.

20. Tucker, WS, Armstrong, CW, Gribble, PA, Timmons, MK, and Yeasting, RA. Scapular muscle activity in overhead athletes with symptoms of secondary shoulder impingement during closed chain exercises. Arch. Phys. Med. Rehabil. 91: 550-556, 2010.

21. Vossen, J, Kramer, J, Burke, D, and Vossen, D. Comparison of dynamic push-up training and plyometric push-up training on upper body power and strength. J Strength Cond Res 14: 248-253, 2000.

22. Wallace, M, and Flanagan, S. Boxing: Resistance Training Considerations for Modifying Injury Risk. Strength Cond J 21: 31-39, 1999.

23. Wood, H, and Baumgarther, T Objectivity, Reliability, and Validity of the Bent-Knee Push-Up for College-Age Women. Measurement in Physical Education and Exercise Science 8: 203-212, 2004.

24. Youdas, JW, Budach, BD, Ellerbusch, JV, Stucky, CM, Wait, KR, and Hollman, JH. Comparison of nuscle-activation patterns during the conventional push-up and perfect pushup exercises. J. Strength Cond Res. 24: 3352-3362, 2010.